

Pakistan harbours militants, extols virtues of terrorists: India at UN

United Nations: India today launched a sharp attack on Pakistan for raising the Kashmir issue at the UN saying "it is a country that uses terrorism as state policy and provides terrorists sanctuary".

Kashmir Unrest

Calling its reference to Kashmir an "attempt at misuse" of the UN platform, India's Permanent Representative Syed Akbaruddin said on Thursday, "The attempt came from Pakistan, a country that covets the territory of others; a country that uses terrorism as state policy towards that misguided end; a country that extols the virtues of terrorists and that provides sanctuary to UN-designated terrorists; and a country that masquerades its efforts as support for human rights and self-determination."

Akbaruddin also said that Islamabad's cynical efforts to internationalise the (Kashmir) dispute has fallen flat.

He drew attention to Islamabad's defeat last December in its re-election bid for the Human Rights Council as a sign of the loss of its credibility.

"Pakistan is the same country whose track record has failed to convince the international community to gain membership of the Human Rights Council in this very session of the UNGA," he said.

"The international community has long seen through such designs," he added.

"Cynical attempts, like the one this morning, therefore, find no resonance in this forum or elsewhere in the UN," he further said.

In his speech, Akbaruddin criticised "the politicisation and select targeting of countries" on human rights issues.

"An aggressive 'naming and shaming' exercise has its limits, is often counter-productive and tends to divide member states into opposing camps. A more constructive and non-confrontational approach that is sensitive to the genuine concerns and capacity constraints of countries would help countries improve their human rights records," he said.

Earlier at a high-level UN General Assembly (UNGA) debate on "Human Rights at the Centre of the Global Agenda", Pakistan's Permanent Representative Maleeha Lodhi accused India of human rights violations in Kashmir and of carrying out an "extra-judicial killing of a person" she described as a "Kashmiri leader".

It was a reference to Burhan Wani, the 22-year-old Hizbul Mujahideen terrorist, who was killed on July 8 in a gunfight. The violence in the state following his death has killed 37 people so far.

Lodhi said Indian forces were resorting to "brutal acts to suppress the right to self-determination of the people of Kashmir".

Even as she attacked India, Lodhi struck contradictory notes asserting that "human rights cannot be guaranteed in situations of turmoil and conflict" and that the "human rights agenda needs to be depoliticised".

"Tabling of country specific resolutions without the consent of the countries has proven to be counter-productive," she had added.

Ban reiterates offer of 'good offices' for Indo-Pak ties

Meanwhile, separately, Secretary General Ban Ki-moon's spokesperson Stephane Dujarric reiterated Ban's call "to both sides to exercise restraint".

Briefing reporters earlier Thursday, Dujarric said that Ban was closely following the situation in Kashmir and "regrets the loss of lives".

While Ban was ready to use his "good offices" to facilitate India and Pakistan resolving the situation, it could be only at the request of both sides, he added.
