Emily Ratajkowski raised more than a few eyebrows when she visited Sydney's Camp Cove beach in an exceptionally skimpy black bikini.

While the model attempted to keep her scant attire in place, she suffered an unfortunate wardrobe malfunction while purchasing an iced beverage during the outing.

Leaning against the counter, a shift in her bikini top gave passing beach-goers an unexpected eyeful.

Flaunting her curves in the revealing swimwear, Emily appeared refreshed and relaxed despite having just landed in Sydney hours earlier.

Wearing her dark locks loose around her shoulders, she rocked a nude make-up palette consisting of a flawless complexion, dark brows and a pink lip

Chatting animatedly with a brunette companion, the Blurred Lines stunner emphasized her abs with black criss-cross straps across her stomach.

Sipping from a glass, she helped her friend with the complicated straps of her own swimsuit which appeared to have come undone.

Emily carefully attached her pal's garment, wrapping the string around the friend's waist several time before tying it into a knot.

The brunette beauty is in the country to host GQ Australiaâ€™s Men Of The Year Awards on Wednesday night.

She arrived in Australia on Sunday after a trip to Las Vegas over the weekend to attend the REVOLVE Awards, where she won the coveted Woman of the Year award.

Earlier this year, Emily shocked friends and fans when she announced she married Sebastian Bear-McClard in a courthouse wedding in February after dating just a few weeks.

It doesn't appear as though Sebastian has joined his wife on her trip Down Under.

Previously Emily was in a four-year relationship with film producer Jeff Magid.
