NEW Bond girl Ana de Armas is shown naked straddling her screen lover in an X-rated sex scene from a steamy movie.

The 30-year-old was yesterday unveiled as one of the stars of the 25th spy film, which has been dubbed the 'MeToo' Bond because it is set to feature a 'woke' 007.

She starred in Robert De Niro boxing movie Hands Of Stone, appearing in bed with Édgar RamÍrez's boxing champ Roberto DurÁn.

Ana played Felicidad Iglesias, a student who goes on to have five children with the sporting ace.

In one scene she is seen snapping her co-star with a Polaroid camera, before they both strip off and she climbs on top of him.

Another shows her wearing a pink bodysuit, as they lay down on a bed together before passionately kissing.

Cuban-Spanish actress Ana is not afraid to strip off for roles, also appearing naked in 2017 hit Blade Runner 2049, 2011's Blind Alley and 2009 comedy Sex, Party and Lies.

Ana also played a girl who lured Keanu Reeves' hapless dad into a threesome before blackmailing him in 2015's erotic thriller Knock Knock.

The star had leading roles in Jonah Hill's 2016 comedy War Dogs and will appear alongside Clive Owen in action movie

The Informer later this year.

She's also got to know future Bond co-star Daniel Craig by playing a nurse opposite his detective in crime-mystery Knives Out, which hits cinemas this autumn.

She was revealed to be playing a Bond girl during a press conference at 007 writer Ian Fleming's villa in Jamaica yesterday.

The as-yet-unnamed film will be co-written by Fleabag's Phoebe Waller-Bridge, who joined the team after Daniel demanded bosses bring her on board.

Producer Barbara Broccoli said recently that Bond's attitudes to women would be moving with the times.

She said: "The Me Too movement has had a huge impact" rightfully, thankfully "on society, and these films should reflect that, as everything we do should."

Daniel joined director Cary Joji Fukunaga, Ana, Naomie Harris and Lashana Lynch at the launch

Daniel added: "Bond has always adapted for the times."

Also joining the cast is Bohemian Rhapsody star Rami Malek, who won an Oscar this year for this performance as Freddie Mercury.

Meanwhile, franchise regulars Ralph Fiennes, Naomie Harris, Rory Kinnear, Léa Seydoux, Ben Whishaw and Jeffrey Wright were all revealed to be returning.

However, Bond fans will have to be patient - with the film not due to be released until 8 April next year.
