

Thirsty Brits hit the town to celebrate the end of dry January and Brexit

01/02/2020 16:45 by admin

Thirsty Brits hit the town last night to celebrate Brexit and the end of dry January.

Hundreds of sozzled revellers took to city centres across the country to party away a month of sobriety.

Two women leave little to the imagination as they march through Birmingham's Broad Street

A group of young woman don traditional Bavarian outfits as they party the night away in Birmingham

City centres across the country were packed with drinkers

And the added incentive of leaving the EU meant it was enough to send drinkers wild.

Party-goers in Birmingham descended on the city's the Broad Street nightclub strip to party the night away.

Midnight turned Dry January into binge drinking February.

Party-goers made sure they used every hour to celebrate a new beginning.

Police arrested one man for an unknown incident and he was led to an awaiting cop van.

Brexit and the close of dry January brought hoards of drinkers to Blackpool city centre

One young woman battles the wind in Blackpool

Two pals sit down for a cig in Newcastle

Nothing screams a good night like a food selfie

Two pals fool around with huge sunglasses

One lad gives his pal a piggy back as they fool around in the streets

The chilly weather didn't put of these to as one took to the streets in Blackpool in a skimpy dress

This trio smile widely as they enjoy their night to mark the end of Brexit

A group of pals stop for a cigarette in Blackpool

Pubs and city streets across the country were packed with party-goers

- The Sun